“I have spent my professional life writing about teaching and learning, and this is my first novel. You might ask if this novel is autobiographical, and I would say – yes, in some ways, it is – but like all writers I have blended the facts with the fantasies that have blossomed over time. But as I invited the characters into the story, they became independently alive and spoke with their own voices. At times all characters were speaking at once, clamouring to be heard! I have tried to blend these real, earthy conversational cameos with the voice of the more mature narrator, and the inner voice of reflection. I hope you grow to love and understand each character as much as I do!”

“So many people have influence over our lives, but I would like to thank Harvey, Sam and Don for their influence over mine. I would also like to thank the five sisters for their gossips, grizzles and grumpings – and the endless gifts of laughter so freely shared”
